Consecutive Finger Use - How often the same finger is used to type a key as was used to type the previous key. An example of this would be typing "fg" on QWERTY. When looking at "g", the program notes that the index finger was also previously used to type "f". The lower the number the better.

☒ Include instances of the same key being pressed twice in a row (example: typing "ff").

Consecutive Hand and Thumb Use - How often the same hand was used to type a key as was used to type the previous key (thumbs are grouped as a separate entity). An example of this would be typing "af" on QWERTY. When looking at "f", the program notes that the left hand was also previously used to type "a". The lower the number the better.

☒ Include instances of the same key being pressed twice in a row (example: typing "ff").

Modifier Key Use - How often the Shift, AltGr, and Shift+AltGr modifiers are used with characters in the text.

Additional statistics will be coming to this section later this year.

I hate these sort of place holder messages, however, I figured I'd make a note so you'd know where to look in coming updates.

If you have any suggestions feel free to email me.
